ABSTRACT. We investigate the values taken by real linear combinations of two primes and a bounded number of powers of two. Under certain conditions, we are able to demonstrate that these values can be made arbitrarily close to any real number by taking sufficiently many powers of two.